THE LOYALIST

The Guardian

The Trustworthy Stylist Who Becomes Your Client's Forever Person

CORE MOTIVATION IN THE SALON

> Type Sixes are driven by a need for security, support, and trust. They are loyal, responsible, and highly attuned to risk. In the salon, Sixes are the stylists who have 20-year relationships with clients, who show up every single day, and who the whole team depends on.

CLIENT COMMUNICATION STYLE

- Sixes communicate with warmth, honesty, and a genuine interest in getting it right. They often ask confirming questions — 'Is this what you mean? Are you sure?'
- They are great at setting expectations: they would rather over-communicate than have a client be surprised.
- Natural strength: Clients feel completely safe and well-informed. Sixes are trustworthy in the truest sense.
- Growth edge: Managing their own anxiety so it doesn't seep into client interactions as excessive hesitation.

THE CONSULTATION

- Sixes are thorough consultors — they cover everything and make sure the client is truly on board before beginning.
- They can be prone to worst-case-scenario thinking during consultations: 'What if their hair breaks? What if they hate it?'
- Tip: Develop a consultation protocol that channels thoroughness productively — and teaches them to trust their expertise when everything checks out.

CREATIVITY & ARTISTRY

- Sixes can be creatively cautious — they may stick to proven techniques rather than experimenting.
- Their creative work is consistently reliable and well-executed — clients always know what to expect.
- Growth edge: Give themselves permission to take small creative risks within a safety structure — try one new technique per month.
- Sixes who develop trust in their skills can become quietly bold and creatively adventurous.

SELF-WORTH MASTERY: MOVING FROM FIXED TO GROWTH

- Fixed pattern → Growth prompt: 'I doubt myself even when things are going well — I keep waiting for something to go wrong.' → Look at your client retention rate, your rebooking percentage, your reviews. What does the evidence actually say about your skill? Write it down and keep it somewhere visible for the days your doubt is loudest.

- Fixed pattern → Growth prompt: 'I need someone to confirm I'm ready before I take the next step.' → You have been ready longer than you know. Identify one step you've been waiting for permission to take — a price increase, a specialization, a leadership opportunity. What would you do if you trusted your own judgment as much as you trust someone else's?
- Fixed pattern → Growth prompt: 'My reliability and loyalty feel ordinary — other stylists have more impressive gifts.' → Dependability is extraordinarily rare in this industry. Your clients stay because they trust you completely. That trust is a business asset worth more than any trend or technique. How could you leverage it more intentionally?
- Fixed pattern → Growth prompt: 'I'm afraid that if I raise my prices or step into a bigger role, I'll lose what I've built.' → Your clients don't stay because of your price point. They stay because of you. A modest, well-communicated price increase from a trusted stylist has a retention rate that would surprise you. What's one small step you could take this month?
- Your growth affirmation: My track record is my truth. I have shown up reliably, cared deeply, and built something real. I trust myself as much as my clients trust me — and that is a very high standard.

BUILDING YOUR BUSINESS BEHIND THE CHAIR

- Sixes build businesses on trust, consistency, and loyalty — which are, in the long run, the most durable foundations for a career behind the chair.
- Lean into retention strategies: pre-booking, rebooking scripts, loyalty programs, and personal follow-ups. Your natural tendency toward care and follow-through makes these feel genuine rather than transactional.
- Build a referral network strategically. Your clients trust you deeply — make it easy for them to refer you. A simple 'I would love to meet anyone in your life who'd appreciate this kind of care' is all a Six needs to activate their referral base.
- Raise your prices incrementally and regularly — not in huge jumps that feel risky, but in small, consistent steps that build confidence over time. Track your retention rate as evidence that your clients value you enough to stay.
- Document your long-term client results — hair health over years, transformations, the trust journey. This story is powerful marketing and genuine evidence of your unique value.
- Join a professional community: a study group, a salon association, or a mastermind. Sixes thrive when they have trusted peers who reflect their competence back to them.

SELLING SERVICES & RETAIL

- Sixes are excellent retail sellers when they genuinely believe in a product — their loyalty is contagious.
- They build trust over time, and clients buy from people they trust. Long-term client relationships become natural retail conversations.
- Best approach: Let Sixes test products themselves first. Once they believe in something, they will recommend it consistently and genuinely.
- Avoid high-pressure retail tactics — they feel deeply wrong to a Six and undermine their sense of integrity.
- Sixes are the best at building long-term retail relationships — clients who have bought from a Six for years buy every time.
- They are excellent at checking in: 'Are you still using the treatment? How has your hair been?' — this care-based follow-through drives repurchases.
- Watch for: Underselling because they don't want to feel pushy. Remind them that recommending is caring.

FEEDBACK, BOUNDARIES & TOUGH CONVERSATIONS WITH CLIENTS

- Sixes need feedback delivered with warmth and specificity — and ideally from a trusted source. Feedback from an unknown or inconsistent manager can spiral into excessive self-doubt.
- They handle feedback best when it comes with context: 'You are doing this really well — here's one area I'd like to explore with you.' The affirmation isn't flattery — it's the anchor that lets the Six integrate the growth edge.
- With unhappy clients: Sixes can over-apologize and over-promise in their anxiety to make things right. Practice: acknowledge, assess, offer. Don't promise what you can't deliver.
- Setting boundaries with difficult clients is a significant growth area. Sixes may tolerate bad behavior because they fear the conflict of addressing it. Script: 'I care about the relationship too much not to say something. When X happens, it makes it hard for me to do my best work for you.'
- Giving feedback: Sixes are often excellent at constructive feedback when they feel safe. They are empathetic, specific, and genuinely want the recipient to succeed.
- Tough conversations: Sixes can overthink before difficult conversations, building up anxiety that makes the conversation harder than it needs to be. Practice: have the conversation 24 hours after deciding to, not later. The anticipation is worse than the reality.

TEAM DYNAMICS, FEEDBACK & UTILIZING YOUR GIFTS ON A SALON TEAM

- On a salon team, Sixes are the spine — the people who show up reliably, hold the culture together, and can be trusted completely. A team of Sixes runs on time, follows protocol, and takes care of clients even under pressure.
- They are deeply loyal to people who have earned their trust — and that loyalty creates a kind of team cohesion that is genuinely rare.
- Natural team contribution: Reliability, consistency, client retention, protocol adherence, and the stabilizing presence that helps newer team members feel supported.
- Growth edge: Trusting their own judgment without needing external validation first. A Six who leads from conviction rather than consensus becomes a genuinely powerful team asset.
- Watch for: Anxiety about team change or uncertainty can make Sixes resistant to new systems, new hires, or new directions. Help them see change as something they can navigate, not just survive.
- Power move: Take on a mentorship or training role for a newer team member. The Six's patience, thoroughness, and genuine care make them extraordinary mentors — and mentoring builds the Six's confidence in their own expertise.
- Sixes thrive in salon cultures with clear expectations, consistent leadership, and genuine community. They disengage in chaotic, unpredictable environments.

CAREER PATH ALIGNMENT

- Senior Stylist / Tenured Team Member — the backbone of a great salon
- Salon Manager or Operations Lead — maintaining systems, ensuring quality, building reliable team culture
- Educator or Training Coordinator — teaching and supporting others to grow
- Specialized Service Provider — building a loyal niche following around a specific expertise

STRESS & GROWTH PATHS

UNDER STRESS

Under stress (moving toward Type 3), Sixes become performative, image-focused, and increasingly anxious about how they appear to others. They may overwork and feel increasingly disconnected from their values.

IN GROWTH

In growth (moving toward Type 9), Sixes relax, trust the process, and find genuine peace in their expertise. They become more present, less reactive, and deeply stabilizing for everyone.

WINGS

Every type is influenced by one of its neighboring types — called a wing. While your core type remains primary, your wing adds flavor and nuance to how you show up in the salon.

6w5 — The Defender

The 5 wing adds intellectual depth and self-reliance to the Six. These stylists prepare extensively, know their craft deeply, and rely on competence more than connection to feel secure.

- Client Style: Calm, professional, deeply knowledgeable. Clients feel completely informed and in good hands.
- Selling Style: Fact-based and thorough. Will explain exactly why a product is worth it — clients trust the expertise.
- Challenge: Can become isolated and overly self-contained. Needs to actively build team and client relationships.

6w7 — The Buddy

The 7 wing adds warmth, humor, and social energy. These stylists are fun, engaging, and create an experience that clients genuinely look forward to — while still being deeply trustworthy.

- Client Style: Friendly, warm, entertaining. Clients feel at ease and like they are catching up with a trusted friend.
- Selling Style: Conversational and enthusiastic. Recommendations feel natural and friendly, not scripted.
- Challenge: Anxiety management — the 7 wing can tip into avoidance of difficult conversations. Needs to stay grounded when challenges arise.

YOUR GENIUS: A COSMETOLOGIST SUMMARY

GENIUS INSIGHT

Type Sixes bring something that every great salon is built on: the trust that keeps clients coming back for decades. In a profession where the average client relationship lasts 3-5 years before attrition, a Six's clients stay for 20 — because trust, once given to a Six, is maintained with extraordinary care. The Six's growth invitation is to believe what their track record already proves: that they are excellent, reliable, and worth the full rate they deserve to be charging. When a Six stops waiting for permission and starts trusting the evidence of their own long career, something powerful unlocks. The stylist who has always shown up becomes the stylist who also speaks up — and the combination of trustworthiness and confidence makes them genuinely irreplaceable.
