

TYPE

THE PERFECTIONIST

Moral, Ethical, Improver, Standard bearer, Rule-follower, Judgmental

Feeling a responsibility to maintain order, you hold yourself and others to your high view of “right”.

You exist to bring order into the world and if things are out of order, you can quickly identify the problem and begin to make improvements. You feel that it is your responsibility to “fix” the world and those around you but this is an imperfect world so even if that was your responsibility you would never accomplish that impossible task. You can’t help but identify flaws, it is like the flaws berate you until you do something about them. This leads to a very dominant “inner critic” that is constantly telling you what is wrong with you and your surroundings.

Your dominant struggle of “resentment” is mostly internal as it is “wrong” or “bad” to be angry, you resist being wrong or bad at all costs. So you harbor resentment towards yourself and others until it leaks out in the form of being critical and judgmental. Those around you may feel like they will never live up to your impossible standards. You project your standards onto others and tell yourself, “I don’t get it, if I can do things the right way, why can’t they?” You will offer your “advice” but it can often be seen and felt as being critical and harsh. Most people do not see the world in the same way. Even in the most “perfect” of situations you will find something to be improved. Rest assured, this is a strength, but every strength left unchecked can become a liability.

With that being said, you are not bad. You are good. You do not have to fight to achieve this goal you can rest assured knowing that you are already made good and right through acceptance and understanding of yourself. When you are at your healthiest you do not hold onto these impossible self-imposed standards and begin to enjoy life for all of its perfect imperfections. You understand that you are not responsible for all of life’s flaws and can enjoy the ride. Playful, joyful, funny, energetic are all ways people would describe you at your best as you take on the healthier sides of Type 7, Enthusiast.

Avoids

Being wrong, bad, evil, irresponsible, or unredeemable.

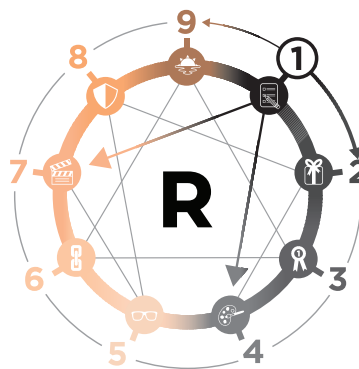

Pursues

Having integrity, being good, accurate, and right. Maintaining standards and rules as they understand them.

Fulfillment

Knowing you are good.

INTERNAL DRIVERS

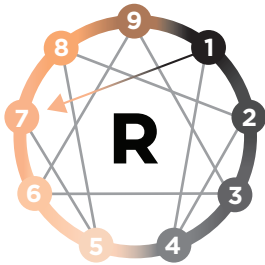

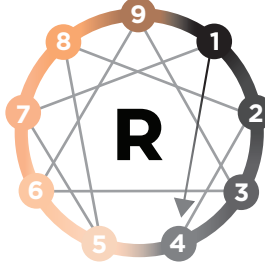

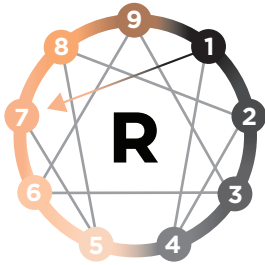

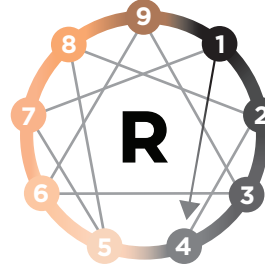

Dominant Struggle

Resentment - The Type 1 feels it is their responsibility for things to be right. They hold themselves and those around them to high standards and when they are not met, resentment can build until it surfaces as being critical or judgmental.

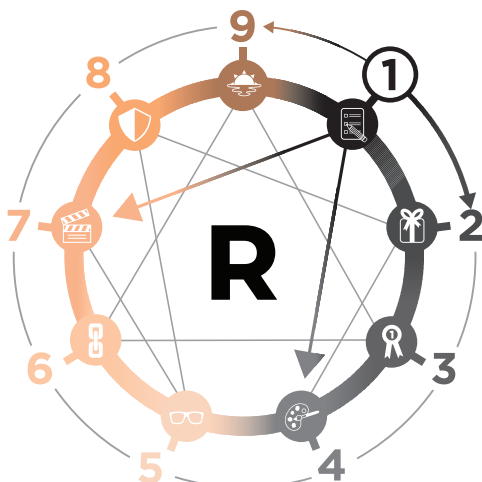

Type 1 - Understanding Your Paths

What sets the Enneagram apart from other personality tools is that it gives you the ability to navigate your internal world. The Enneagram shows you what you look like at your best, worst, and everything in between. Each Enneagram type takes on characteristics of other types in different situations. The paths below show what that looks like for you.

 CONFIDENCE PATH How you think/ behave when you are mentally/emotionally healthy Type 1 moves toward Confident side of Type 7 • More accepting of the world and its flaws. • Joyful, energetic, and enthusiastic. • Offer “advice” without feeling responsible for others actions.	 INSECURITY PATH How you think/ behave when mentally/emotionally stressed Type 1 moves toward Insecure side of Type 4 • Your harsh inner critic begins to tell you that you’re flawed and will always be. • You withdraw as you believe there is nothing that can be done to make things right. • You become less logical and more emotionally reactive in your decisions.
 FAMILIAR PATH How you think/ behave with those closest to you, your blind-spot Type 1 moves toward Insecure side of Type 7 • Become more focused on your needs and desires. • Tend to be forgetful and scattered. • Become more carefree and childlike.	 LEVERAGE PATH Learning to leverage natural weaknesses as strengths Type 1 moves toward Confident side of Type 4 • Allow yourself to dream and become more creative. • Understand and express your emotions in a more productive manner. • Accept and embrace your imperfections to better leverage the strengths of those around you.

Type 1 - Understanding Your Wings

Wings are the Enneagram types that neighbor yours that add certain characteristics to your personality from those types. Typically, one wing is more dominant than the other, however, it is not uncommon for a person to have “balanced wings” where they take characteristics from each wing equally.

1w9 “Idealist”

More detached, logical, impersonal and objective. Seeks to do the right things in the right way and will often shy away from confrontation to maintain order.

1w2 “Advocate”

More relationally warm and connected to others. Leverages their responsibility to serve the greater good or others.

Leadership Style

Strengths

Detail oriented, systematic, follow-through, constant improvement, methodical.

Weaknesses

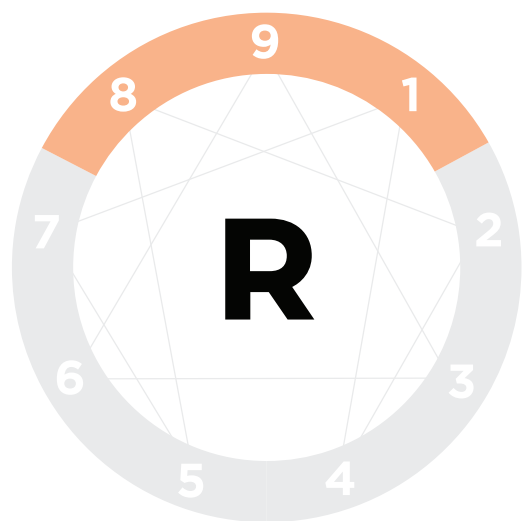

Black and white thinking, stubborn, narrow-minded, hyper-critical.

How to lead Type 1s

When leading a Type 1, give clear guidance and parameters to follow. What is right and what is wrong and where do they have autonomy to create? Given these guidelines, a Type 1 will be a great “closer” in projects to see them through while also maintaining standards. Type 1's will bear the responsibility of being right or doing things the right way. If you notice others are not maintaining the same level of responsibility, have open conversations about shared responsibility to keep from harboring resentment.

Triads

Your triad is another way of describing how you consistently interpret and respond to life. They are also known as the “Centers Of Intelligence” and are made up of three sets of three Enneagram types. Types 2, 3, and 4 are in the heart or feeling triad, types 5, 6, and 7 are in the head or thought triad, and types 8, 9, and 1 can be found in the gut or instinct triad.

8,9,1 - Gut / Instinct Triad

Emotional Struggle - Anger

- 8 - Externalizes Anger - Seeking to protect others and maintain control the Type 8 will externalize their anger with fast and intense reactions or responses. The Type 8 will take action on their anger in order to maintain control of their environment which leads to their dominant struggle of excess.
- 9 - Avoids Anger - Anger disrupts the peace and harmony that a Type 9 longs for so they will fall asleep to or avoid their anger in order to keep the peace. This avoidance behavior leads to their dominant struggle of sloth by falling asleep to their anger or desires.
- 1 - Internalizes Anger - the Type 1 believes that anger or the expression of anger is bad so they will repress their anger which leads to being critical or judgmental. This constant repression of anger leads to their dominant struggle of resentment for themselves, their environment, or others.

Common Desire: Justice

- 8 - Does not want to be harmed or manipulated - They will take action when witnessing or experiencing an injustice for themselves, those they care about, or their environment.
- 9 - Does not want others to be overlooked or feel unimportant - They will respond to this injustice by making space for others to be seen and heard.
- 1 - Bears the burden of responsibility and believes that justice means doing the right things and being right - They will bring attention to what is wrong so it can be addressed, fixed, or improved.

Childhood Interpretations

Childhood Interpretations tell us how our type perceives or interprets life starting in childhood. We often carry this interpretation into adulthood which can lead to unhealthy or self-defeating behavior. We believe that your situations and circumstances did not make you who you are but rather your interpretation and response to those situations and circumstances created a pattern of behavior in how you approach the world. We believe that we are born with our Enneagram type, we are uniquely created with this personality type and see the world through the lens of our individual personalities. Think back to your childhood and think about how you may have viewed the world through your childhood interpretation and how you can begin leveraging this understanding moving forward.

Type 1

"It is not okay to be wrong or make mistakes."

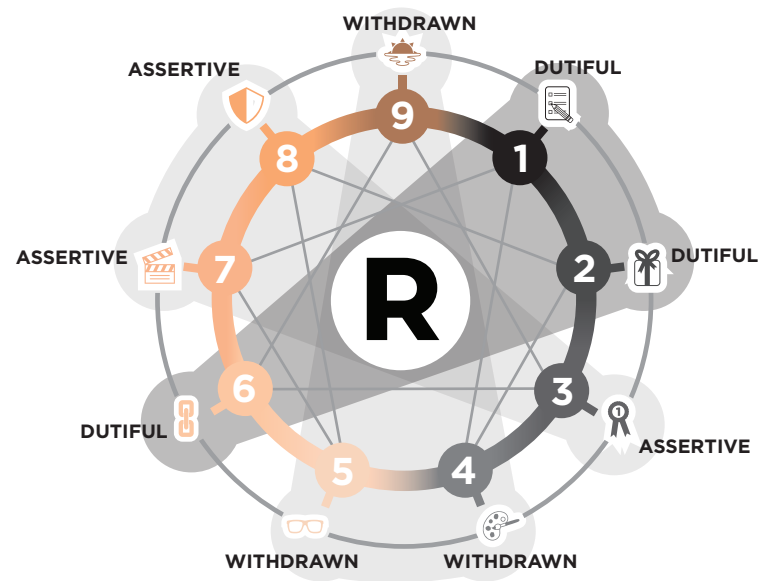

Defense Mechanisms

Defense Mechanisms are our default method of dealing with stress or stressful situations.

Type 1 - Reaction Formation

Having high standards and principles, Type 1's never want to display emotions that they see as bad or inappropriate.

When experiencing an inappropriate emotion, they will conceal it and instead bring up the opposite emotion to contradict it. This defense mechanism is called reaction formation.

Interpersonal Relationships (AKA "Stances")

This shows us how we get others to respond to us to get our needs met. There are three different interpersonal styles; Assertive, Dutiful, and Withdrawn.

Assertive Style 3,7,8

Moves against people and takes action to get what they want.

Dutiful Style 1,2,6

Moves towards people to get their needs met externally.

Withdrawn Style 4,5,9

Moves away from people and turns inward to find fulfillment.

1 - Dutiful Style

- Moves toward others to get their needs met.
- React to stress or difficulty by serving or giving.
- Will ask themselves, "How can I meet the expectations others have of me? How can I be a responsible person?"
- Believe they must do something to get something.
- Loyal and committed.
- Will become compliant and do what they believe is expected of them.
- Lives with the regret of what they should have done or could have done.
- Will forget their wants and desires and instead do things on behalf of others to be loved and accepted.

Navigating Conflict (AKA “Harmonic Triad”)

Each type copes or deals with conflict differently. Here is how your type deals with conflict in relation to the other enneagram types.

There are three styles for dealing with conflict:

Reactive Style 4,6,8

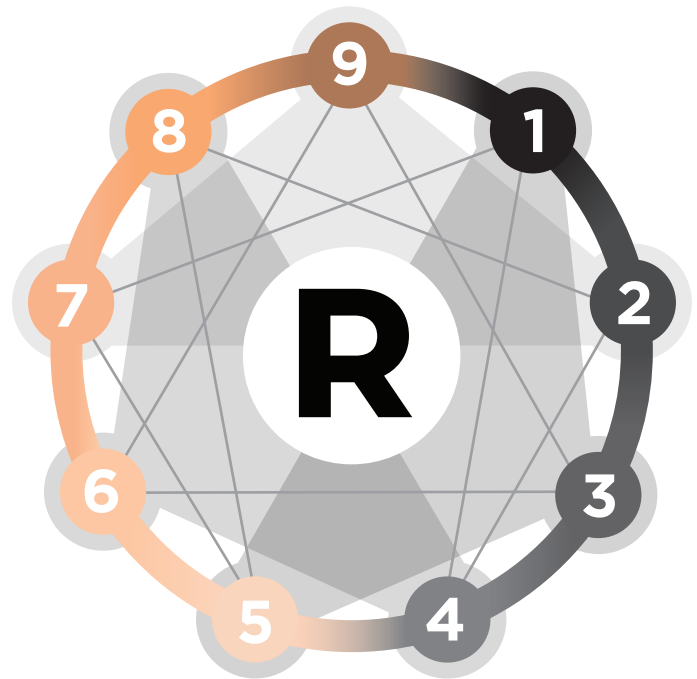

- Emotionally reactive and wants others to respond in the same way.
- Work themselves up.
- Does not trust others easily.
- Have and voice strong opinions.
- Will see those in the logical style as lacking passion and those in the optimistic style as dismissive.

Logical 1,3,5

- Emotionally detach to find and follow logical solutions.
- Seeks to remain objective in all circumstances.
- Does not want to get worked up and would rather stay calm and controlled to resolve issues.
- Will see those in the reactive style as unreasonable and those in the optimistic style as unrealistic.

Optimistic 2,7,9

- Reframe negative situations with a positive perspective.
- Consistently optimistic and see the bright side of every situation.
- Aims to create happiness and contentment for themselves and others.
- Will see those in the reactive style as angry and those in the logical style as limiting.

Type 1 Conflict Triggers

Criticism or scrutiny, irresponsibility, laziness, lack of accuracy, absence of integrity, deceptive behaviors.

Next Steps

1. Grow Together

Process what you are discovering with your team, spouse, or a friend to dive deeper into how this information applies to you and your life.

2. Unsure of your results?

It is not uncommon for people to mistype as personality assessments are only so accurate and sometimes we do not know ourselves as well as we think we do. Schedule a “Typing Interview” with one of our trained coaches to “confirm” your type and get the most out of your personality type.

3. Hire A Coach

You can read these results but they are incapable of reading you. It is helpful to be guided through this new information while also practically applying it to grow and accomplish your goals. We have a team of coaches that are eager to get to know you and help you as you make progress towards your goals.
