

TYPE

2

THE HELPER

Supportive, Caring, Generous,
Possessive, People-pleasing

You seek to support in order to be fulfilled, meeting others needs desiring to be appreciated and loved.

You believe you are only loved for the gifts you give. Your time, support, and care are the currency you hope to exchange for appreciation and acceptance. At your best you give these gifts generously without an expectation of return. At your worst you give with the expectation of a return and if this expectation is not met you will take action becoming aggressive and confrontational, characteristics of the unhealthy Type 8, Challenger.

You are driven by the feeling that you are responsible for the wellbeing and feelings of those around you. At your best this is a strength as you will be more attuned to others feelings, experiencing heightened emotional intelligence. At your worst, this may become a liability as you will be solely driven by the emotions of others while completely forgetting your own needs and emotions until they well up all at once becoming overwhelming.

In relationships, you struggle when others reject your efforts to help. You will feel like they are rejecting you when they reject your support. Rejection, being something you avoid, can leave you mentally and emotionally stressed. You are constantly battling pride, your dominant struggle, as you give because you are ashamed that you have needs. Because you are ashamed of your needs you give and give until you have nothing left. Pride may overtake you as you find yourself making statements that are very “me” centered such as: “What about me?” “I did this for you, why didn’t you return the favor?” “I was there for you, I expected you to be there for me.” A good indicator of stress is when your statements become self-centered in a negative way.

However, at your healthiest and most confident you are as aware of your emotions and needs as you are of others taking on the best characteristics of the Type 4, Individualist. You realize that there’s no way you could possibly tend to the needs of all people. You look inward understanding that you do not have to support others to receive their love and approval. You are loved and appreciated because of who you are not because of the gifts you give. Realizing you can’t “pour from an empty glass” you ensure you are healthy before ensuring others’ wellbeing. In taking care of your needs you position yourself to give from a healthy place.

Avoids

Rejection, being unwanted, thought worthless, needy, or dispensable.

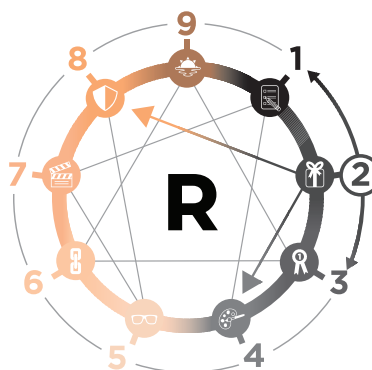

Pursues

Appreciation, being loved, wanted, and giving to others.

Fulfillment

Knowing you are appreciated.

INTERNAL DRIVERS

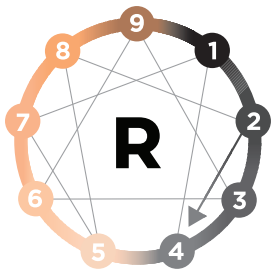

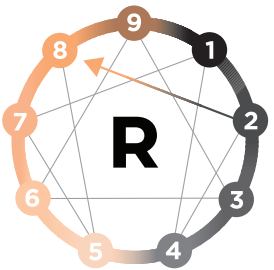

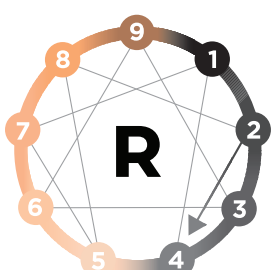

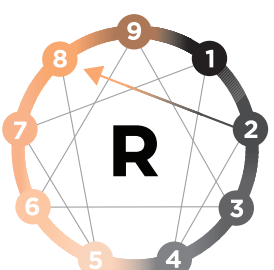

Dominant Struggle

Pride - The Type 2 is constantly giving and serving as they believe this is the “gift” they offer the world. However if and when this gift is not met with their expected appreciation or they feel they are giving more than they are receiving they will become extremely prideful and self focused.

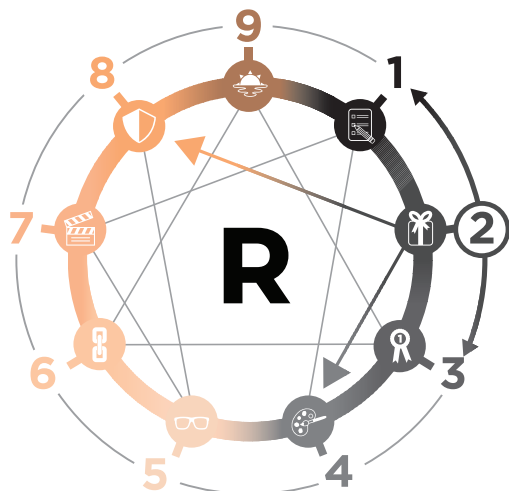

Type 2 - Understanding Your Paths

What sets the Enneagram apart from other personality tools is that it gives you the ability to navigate your internal world. The Enneagram shows you what you look like at your best, worst, and everything in between. Each Enneagram type takes on characteristics of other types in different situations. The paths below show what that looks like for you.

 CONFIDENCE PATH How you think/behave when you are mentally/emotionally healthy Type 2 moves toward Confident side of Type 4 • Address unhealthy motives and seek reconciliation. • Identify and take care of your needs and emotions. • Understand that you are loved and appreciated regardless of what you do to serve others. • Become creative and expressive.	 INSECURITY PATH How you think/behave when mentally/emotionally stressed Type 2 moves toward Insecure side of Type 8 • Seek ways of gaining control to get your needs met. • Become prideful and self absorbed blaming your problems on others. • Believe you must withdraw your support and care. • Become aggressive, harsh, and demanding.
 FAMILIAR PATH How you think/behave with those closest to you, your blind-spot Type 2 moves toward Insecure side of Type 4 • Vulnerable with your emotions and needs. • Easily express dissatisfaction with others. • Treat yourself to items or experiences to meet your own needs.	 LEVERAGE PATH Learning to leverage natural weaknesses as strengths Type 2 moves toward Confident side of Type 8 • Share your emotions in an objective manner. • Responsive over reactive. • Operate without needing acceptance of others. • Self-affirming and self-motivating.

Type 2 - Understanding Your Wings

Wings are the Enneagram types that neighbor yours that add certain characteristics to your personality from those types. Typically, one wing is more dominant than the other, however, it is not uncommon for a person to have “balanced wings” where they take characteristics from each wing equally.

2w1 “Servant”

More critical of themselves and oftentimes more judgmental of others and their lack of selflessness. Seeks to leverage their service to others in a more quiet and hidden manner.

2w3 “Host/Hostess”

More confident, charming, outgoing, and boisterous in their service. Believes success is found in service to others and their goals.

Leadership Style

Strengths

Helpful, supportive, selfless, team player, event planning and execution.

Weaknesses

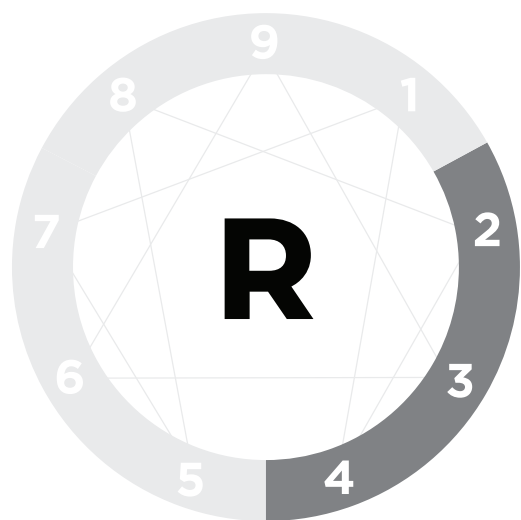

Sensitive, emotional, prideful, and reactive.

How to lead Type 2s

When leading a Type 2 allow them the opportunity to serve others and ensure their gifts and contributions are appreciated. A Type 2 will give more than their fair share of effort to serve their team but will rarely ask for affirmation until they are in a toxic or unhealthy place. Ensure that they have time to care for themselves while also being intentional to care for them. If a Type 2 starts making repetitive “I” or “ME” centered statements they may be slipping into their unhealthy tendencies.

Triads

Your triad is another way of describing how you consistently interpret and respond to life. They are also known as the “Centers Of Intelligence” and are made up of three sets of three Enneagram types. Types 2, 3, and 4 are in the heart or feeling triad, types 5, 6, and 7 are in the head or thought triad, and types 8, 9, and 1 can be found in the gut or instinct triad.

2,3,4 - Heart / Feeling Triad

Emotional Struggle - Shame

- 2 - Others Feelings - The Type 2 is ashamed that they have needs of their own so they will take action to meet the needs of others in hopes that they will be appreciated. They are more attuned to others' emotions which causes them to completely forget their own feelings and needs. This constant desire to give and receive love in exchange for giving leads to their dominant struggle of pride because their needs are not being met.
- 3 - Avoids Feelings - The Type 3 will avoid feelings as if feelings are a hindrance to their success. With this avoidance of feelings, they may “lose” who they wish to be or who others want them to be. This leads to their dominant struggle of deceit through whatever persona they are presenting at that time.
- 4 - Internalizes Feeling - Type 4's enjoy internalizing, feeling, and becoming attached to their emotions. They do not want to be detached from or move away from their feelings as they believe this is a significant part of their identity. They embrace being melancholy or emotional. Because of their awareness and connection to their emotions they experience their dominant struggle of envy. They are envious of what others have because they view themselves as lacking or flawed due to the awareness of what they do or do not have.

Common Desire: Significant Identity

- 2 - Seeks to take on the identity of being the most loving and caring person - When they are unable to give their support they feel a direct attack on their identity.
- 3 - Seeks to take on the identity of the most successful and accomplished person - They believe they are only as good as their last accomplishment and when they are not viewed as successful or have trouble defining their identity they will aim to transform into what their peers or surroundings say they should be.
- 4 - Seeks to be seen as the most special and unique person - They will constantly seek opportunities to prove they are unique or not normal and mundane. If they are compared or have their work compared to others they will feel a lack of identity or like their identity is being taken away from them.

Childhood Interpretations

Childhood Interpretations tell us how our type perceives or interprets life starting in childhood. We often carry this interpretation into adulthood which can lead to unhealthy or self-defeating behavior. We believe that your situations and circumstances did not make you who you are but rather your interpretation and response to those situations and circumstances created a pattern of behavior in how you approach the world. We believe that we are born with our Enneagram type, we are uniquely created with this personality type and see the world through the lens of our individual personalities. Think back to your childhood and think about how you may have viewed the world through your childhood interpretation and how you can begin leveraging this understanding moving forward.

Type 2

"It's not okay to have needs of your own."

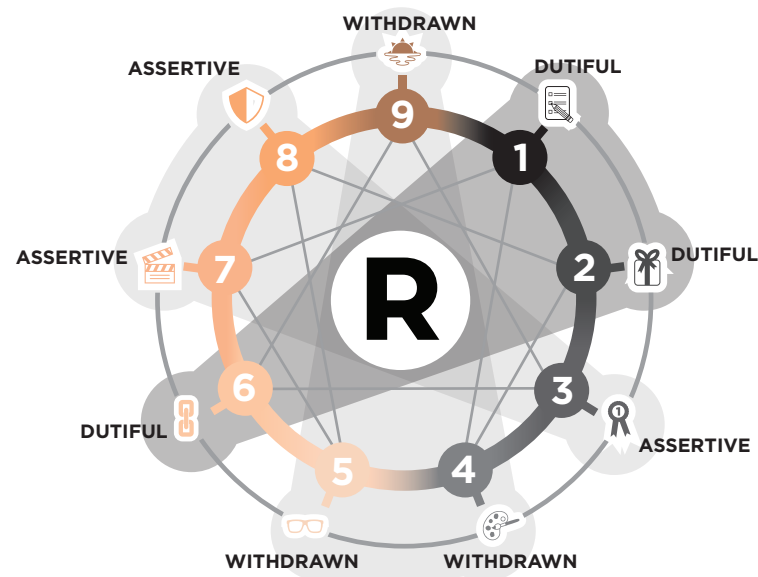

Defense Mechanisms

Defense Mechanisms are our default method of dealing with stress or stressful situations.

Type 2 - Repression

Realizing and addressing that a Type 2 has needs of their own leads to shame and contradicts the identity they wish to embody that they are the most giving and supportive person which leads to repression.

They might repress information like their feelings, desires, wishes, aversions, fears, and needs as these are too difficult to acknowledge so they push them down inside to control them. They believe that if they can control them then they can not cause them any more pain. The truth is, when they acknowledge their needs and share them directly by asking for help, they see that others do love and appreciate them.

Interpersonal Relationships (AKA "Stances")

This shows us how we get others to respond to us to get our needs met. There are three different interpersonal styles; Assertive, Dutiful, and Withdrawn.

Assertive Style 3,7,8

Moves against people and takes action to get what they want.

Dutiful Style 1,2,6

Moves towards people to get their needs met externally.

Withdrawn Style 4,5,9

Moves away from people and turns inward to find fulfillment.

2 - Dutiful Style

- Moves toward others to get their needs met.
- React to stress or difficulty by serving or giving.
- Will ask themselves, "How can I meet the expectations others have of me? How can I be a responsible person?"
- Believe they must do something to get something.
- Loyal and committed.
- Will become compliant and do what they believe is expected of them.
- Lives with the regret of what they should have done or could have done.
- Will forget their wants and desires and instead do things on behalf of others to be loved and accepted.

Navigating Conflict (AKA “Harmonic Triad”)

Each type copes or deals with conflict differently. Here is how your type deals with conflict in relation to the other enneagram types.

There are three styles for dealing with conflict:

Reactive Style 4,6,8

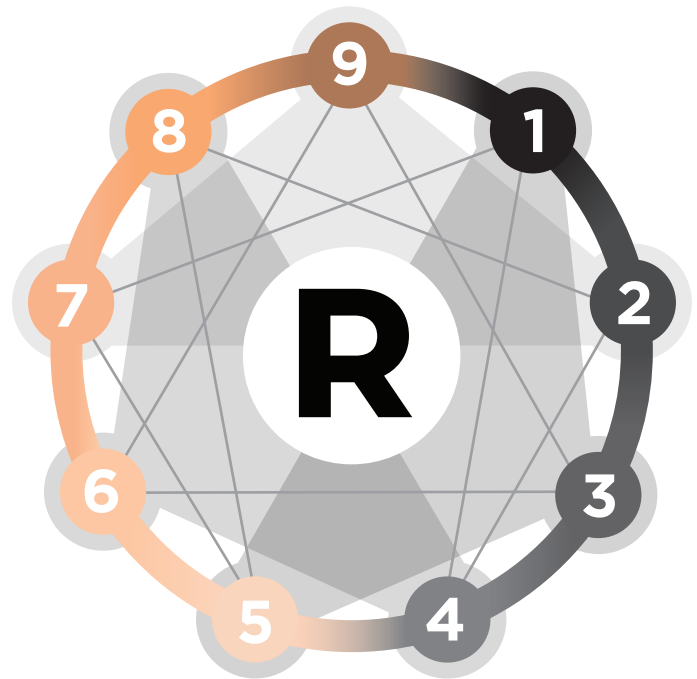

- Emotionally reactive and wants others to respond in the same way.
- Work themselves up.
- Does not trust others easily.
- Have and voice strong opinions.
- Will see those in the logical style as lacking passion and those in the optimistic style as dismissive.

Logical 1,3,5

- Emotionally detach to find and follow logical solutions.
- Seeks to remain objective in all circumstances.
- Does not want to get worked up and would rather stay calm and controlled to resolve issues.
- Will see those in the reactive style as unreasonable and those in the optimistic style as unrealistic.

Optimistic 2,7,9

- Reframe negative situations with a positive perspective.
- Consistently optimistic and see the bright side of every situation.
- Aims to create happiness and contentment for themselves and others.
- Will see those in the reactive style as angry and those in the logical style as limiting.

Type 2 Conflict Triggers

Lack of appreciation, being dismissed, rejection, feeling dispensable or undervalued.

Next Steps

1. Grow Together

Process what you are discovering with your team, spouse, or a friend to dive deeper into how this information applies to you and your life.

2. Unsure of your results?

It is not uncommon for people to mistype as personality assessments are only so accurate and sometimes we do not know ourselves as well as we think we do. Schedule a “Typing Interview” with one of our trained coaches to “confirm” your type and get the most out of your personality type.

3. Hire A Coach

You can read these results but they are incapable of reading you. It is helpful to be guided through this new information while also practically applying it to grow and accomplish your goals. We have a team of coaches that are eager to get to know you and help you as you make progress towards your goals.